The East Bay Community Energy program is discussed on a special episode of "Conversations with Scott Haggerty" currently airing on TV30. Joining Supervisor Haggerty is guest Nick Chaset, CEO of East Bay Energy.

Supervisor Haggerty said, "East Bay Community Energy is a locally governed, non-profit energy provider with the purpose of providing cleaner, greener energy at, or below, rates offered by the incumbent utility, with the added bonus of positive economic development and employment benefits to the County.

"Once launched, East Bay Community Energy will be the largest Community Choice Aggregate in the state of California. Alameda County is proud to have spearheaded the initiation and development of this exceptional program," added Haggerty.

Since the beginning of program exploration in early 2014 and progress along the way, Alameda County and 11 of its cities have formed the East Bay Community Energy Authority. This non-profit public Agency will govern a new Community Choice program. For more information visit www.EBCE.org.

In addition, the show may be viewed via Video on Demand anytime on the station's website @tv30.org.
