- IV. Family Reunification Program Model Development Corrine Lee, Probation Services Coordinator for Mental Health and SUD, was introduced; Corrine works with the Family Reunification programs and spoke about the positive impact Family Reunification can have on generations as well as the community
  - A. What Services Are Currently Available?
    - 1. AB 109 Realignment: The state transferred responsibility to the counties for the realignment population (those on probation, have a felony conviction, and are part of the collaborative courts or the pre-release program) and also gave additional funding to cover these services and support
    - 2. Individualized Service Delivery: Every person has customized support around them
    - 3. Case Management: Family reunification providers should be aware and knowledgeable about all the resources in the community
    - 4. Housing Stipend: Families may qualify for an $800 six-month stipend for opening their home to returning family members
    - 5. There are 3 providers who offer family reunification services (Tri-Cities Community Development Center, Centerforce, Asian Prisoner Support Committee)
  - B. What's Working, What's Not Working?
    - 1. Research finds that healthy co-parenting is important, especially when it comes to father engagement and child development
    - 2. Research also shows that Family Reunification services positively affect parental stress, increases healthy social systems, provides debt relief and health insurance for children and aging adults, as well as financial stability/stable employment
  - C. What's Needed?
    - 1. Who Will The Program Serve?

- a. The client, their extended family, and their larger network of support; it also serves any child beyond blood relatives who someone is acting as a caregiver for
- 2. What Resources/Investments Are Needed?
  - a. Pre-Release connections and family support
  - b. Getting to know the client and their family
  - c. Parenting, communication, strengthening family bonds
  - d. Child custody/support and co-parenting skills

  - g. Support for aging/older adults
  - h. Family housing stipends
  - i. Suggestions from the workgroup: 1) Those coming out of incarceration will need housing and legal services first before they can do anything else; second most important thing is counseling/coparenting counseling, and financial education/job support; 2) Help people navigate through all the information and services; 3) Support for the kids to heal their relationship with the parent, and gender responsiveness; 4) Grassroot organizations need support to grow so they can do more for clients and they need more connections to other organizations in the Bay Area (the Active Programs was shared with the group); also, the Community Corrections Partnership (CCP) Family Reunification Subcommittee meetings can be a great starting place for that; 5) Build collaborative and well-rounded effort among the services (the Alameda County Public Health Department has a list of services and programs available); 6) Basic computer skills and tech training; 7) Transportation; 8) In-person services event at least once a year; 9) Experiences and events from the parent to the family/child that they can share, like sporting event tickets; 10) Immediate connection with Probation and Department of Family Services upon release to minimize duplication of work and overwhelm for the client, and to build collaboration (could be part of pre-release); 11) Substance abuse programs (Family Reunification does not offer these services, but there are many SUD Services currently available); CORE is the one-stop shop which also offers connections to services including SUD; 12) Utilizing tax-defaulted properties for housing, similar to how the Alameda County Sheriff's MOMS program was able to acquire property from Oakland Public Housing (it has an onsite Case Manager and houses 15-16 moms being released); 13) A program that allows a dad with a release date within six months to connect and bond with his children, especially newborns, like San Francisco's One Family and Santa Rita Jail's MOMS and DADS programs (pre-pandemic programs that have since stopped due to COVID-19)
