Wendy Still, Chief Probation Officer, Alameda County Probation Department, presented a PowerPoint presentation on the recent Impact of Justice Tour of the Norwegian Progression Model.

In Norway, the only human right an incarcerated person loses is their liberty. The system, including architecture and habitat, is designed to mimic the community those citizens will return to. Interactions with staff are specifically structured to champion wellness and safety.

Chief Still encouraged the Committee to support the Elevate Justice Act.

Key provisions of the Act include:

- Elevate the juvenile age to all teenagers allowing for 18 and 19-year olds the benefits of age-appropriate intensive rehabilitation services
- Provides the benefits of record sealing to eliminate the added barrier to gaining employment or housing as well as the other barriers associated with having a felony conviction.
- Elevate and further evolve the juvenile justice system focused on rehabilitation for youth
- Develop individualized treatment and rehabilitation plans based on specific risk and protective factors
- Further limit detention by requiring the use of a risk-based intake assessment
- Address juvenile facilities to best reflect the programming and service needs of youth
- Elevate safe communities by further incorporating evidence-based rehabilitative and restorative practices that address behavior to reverse the cycle of victimization in our communities.
- Expand the use of restorative justice programming as a part of individualized treatment and rehabilitation plans to reduce future victimization

Speaker

Mickey Duxbury, very hopeful about implementing some of the Norwegian Progression Model. The County needs to significantly alter the 50% realignment to community based organizations and monies that go to the jails.
